The attached article which Ben sent to me is worth reading !

A number of things stand out to me:

- The geographic concentration of murders has some application to Memphis as reflected in the "Lamar Avenue corridor" identified by the U of M study about which the MSCC board was briefed at a board meeting earlier this year. ( If you don't still have it, it is available on the PSI website at Memphis.edu/psi under "Research."

- I think most of us agree that the increase in violence is in large part due to gangs that are less disciplined than the well structured gangs of the past.

- A number of the "problems/answers" mentioned in the article - especially regarding Baltimore - are things we are trying to address here - more officers; proactive, data-driven policing; focus on gang violence; etc.
